

Meditation recommended for helping attendees 'attend'

30 September 2016

mindful and present in the moment.

"We now know about the plasticity of not just the brain but of the entire organism...medicine and meditation are linked at the etymological core," Kabat-Zinn said, according to the American Medical Association. "Meditation can actually transform your brain."

More information: More Information

Copyright © 2016 HealthDay. All rights reserved.

(HealthDay)—Meditation can allow attending physicians to be "in attendance" in order to heal and maintain personal well-being, according to the American Medical Association.

As part of the International Conference on Physician Health in Boston, Jon Kabat-Zinn, Ph.D., creator of the Mindfulness-Based Stress Reduction Clinic, led attendees in a mindfulness activity to tune in to their own presence in their mind.

Kabat-Zinn describes healing as coming to terms with the way things are, and notes that doing so allows recruitment of an array of capacities, capabilities, and intelligences. Furthermore, he describes the important muscle to exercise as the muscle of one's own presence of mind. Burnout and ignoring the source of problems is not the way to wellness; meditation can help to protect the mind and help healers to heal. Kabat-Zinn recommends practicing meditation every day; meditation has nothing to do with posture and can be done at any time of day, as long as one is being

APA citation: Meditation recommended for helping attendees 'attend' (2016, September 30) retrieved 28 October 2022 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2016-09-meditation-attendees.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.