

Racialized trans and non-binary Canadians report increased harassment

17 November 2020

The transgender pride flag is a symbol of transgender pride and diversity, and transgender rights. Credit: Wikimedia Commons

For the first time, researchers have survey results about the health and wellbeing of trans and non-binary Canadians who also identify as, or who say they are perceived as, people of colour.

This group faces increased levels of physical violence, harassment and sexual assault according to findings from the newest report from Trans PULSE Canada, a national collaborative community research project led by Western University and funded by the Canadian Institutes of Health Research.

"This latest Trans PULSE Canada report shows racialized trans and non-binary people are similar to other trans people in many ways, for example in their levels of education and in their mental health. Where differences really jump out are in experiences of being targeted for discrimination and violence," said Greta Bauer, Ph.D., Professor at Western's Schulich School of Medicine & Dentistry and one of the study's principal investigators. "These are, unfortunately, common occurrences for white trans and non-binary people, but are even more common among those who are racialized."

Almost one-quarter of the racialized trans and non-binary survey respondents experienced physical violence in the past five years, and nearly half experienced sexual harassment. Half had been harassed at work or school at some point in their lives.

Seventy-three percent of racialized trans and non-binary respondents said they worried about being stopped or harassed by police or security, and just over 30 percent said they had avoided calling 911 for police services when it was needed.

"The inability to move safely in society and access emergency services highlights how the risk of violence is amplified when it cannot be safely addressed," said Bauer.

The Trans PULSE Canada research team includes contributions from more than 100 community and academic researchers working on different analyses from a large national study.

Provided by University of Western Ontario

APA citation: Racialized trans and non-binary Canadians report increased harassment (2020, November 17) retrieved 15 July 2022 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2020-11-racialized-trans-non-binary-canadians.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.